

University of Nebraska - Lincoln

DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln

Faculty Publications: School of Music

Music, School of 1998

Music for Holy Week and Easter

Peter M. Lefferts

University of Nebraska-Lincoln, plefferts1@unl.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub>

Part of the Music Commons

Lefferts, Peter M., "Music for Holy Week and Easter" (1998). Faculty Publications: School of Music. 41.
<https://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub/41>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Music, School of at DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln. It has been accepted for inclusion in Faculty Publications: School of Music by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln.

Music for Holy Week and Easter

The later medieval church celebrated Holy Week and Easter with many unique liturgical forms and ceremonies, often of an intrinsically dramatic character. These included major processions on Palm Sunday, Maundy Thursday, Holy Saturday, and Easter Sunday; the singing of the passions during mass as the New Testament Gospel on Palm Sunday (St. Matthew Passion), Wednesday (St. Luke Passion), and Good Friday (St. John Passion); and in many locales in northern France and England, the performance of two Latin liturgical dramas—the Visitatio sepulchre performed at the end of Matins on Easter Sunday morning, and the Officium peregrinorum, performed at Vespers that same evening or on the Monday or Tuesday following. Music is a less significant if still salient component of the extraliturgical, primarily spoken vernacular dramas and cycles of Eastertide and Corpus Christi.

Before the 15th century only a few of these occasions attracted written polyphony in England. There are motets on the Passion of Christ, the Resurrection, and on Mary Magdalene at the tomb, but their performance contexts are uncertain. There are also polyphonic settings of the refrain hymn Gloria laus et honor for the Palm Sunday procession, the Alleluia pascha nostrum for Easter mass, and the verses of two antiphons sung in processions to the Cross on Easter and subsequent weekdays (Crucifixum in carne from Sedit angelus and Dicant nunc Iudei from Christus resurgens). In the 15th century, however, the written repertoire was expanded into a significant corpus of liturgically rooted, functional polyphony for the processions and passions. This was music distinct in its sources and patterns of transmission from the elaborate English polyphonic mass cycles, motets, and antiphons that circulated so widely at home and on the Continent in the same time period. Several of its sources, including Shrewsbury School, Manuscript VI (ca. 1430, from Lichfield Cathedral), and BL Egerton 3307 (ca. 1440, perhaps from St. George's, Windsor), are relatively comprehensive in coverage and arranged in clear liturgical order.

The 15th-century music for Holy Week and Easter consists of unpretentious settings, mostly for two or three solo voices, some based on chant but most freely composed; it is highly probable that a tradition of simple, improvised settings lies behind these only slightly more sophisticated pieces and continued alongside them well into the 16th century. The music for processions includes settings of processional hymns, antiphons, psalms, and litanies. In the passions, a more extended form mixing chant and partsong, polyphony was applied to all direct speech apart from the words of Christ, thus including the words of the crowd (turba) and other individual characters. The narrative passages of the Evangelist and the words of Christ remained in plainsong following traditional "Passion tones." Performance of the passions had from an early time taken an essentially dramatic approach, indicated by litterae significativae, or letter symbols, that distinguished roles in the biblical text and prescribed qualities of performance for the reader. In missals of the English Use of Salisbury these letters were m (media vox) for the Evangelist, b (bassa vox) for Christ, and a (alta vox) for the rest. The English passions, setting only the a words polyphonically, are the earliest in a lengthy and distinguished European musical tradition.

Peter M. Lefferts

Bibliography

Primary

- Charles, Sydney Robinson, ed. The Music of the Pepys MS 1236. Corpus Mensurabilis Musicae 40. Rome: American Institute of Musicology, 1967
- Hughes, Andrew, ed. Fifteenth-Century Liturgical Music. Vol. 1: Antiphons and Music for Holy Week and Easter. Early English Church Music 8. London: Stainer & Bell, 1967
- McPeck, Gwynn S., ed. The British Museum Manuscript Egerton 3307. London: Oxford University Press, 1963

Secondary

- Allenson, Stephen. "The Inverness Fragments: Music from a Pre-Reformation Scottish Parish Church and School." Music and Letters 70 (1989): 1-45
- Bukofzer, Manfred R. "Holy-Week Music and Carols at Meaux Abbey." In Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Music. New York: Norton, 1950, pp. 113—75
- Fischer, Kurt von, and Werner Braun. "Passion." New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians 14:276-86;
- Harrison, Frank LI. "Music for the Sarum Rite: MS 1236 in the Pepys Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge." Annales musicologiques 6 (1958-63): 99-144
- Rankin, Susan K. "Shrewsbury School, Manuscript VI: A Medieval Part-Book?" Proceedings of the Royal Musical Association 102 (1975-76): 129-44

◦ ◦ ◦ ◦ ◦ ◦

Published in Medieval England: An Encyclopedia, ed. Paul Szarmach, M. Teresa Tavormina, Joel T. Rosenthal, Catherine E. Karkov, Peter M. Lefferts, & Elizabeth Parker McLachlan (New York: Garland Publishing, 1998), p. 359–360. Copyright © 1998 Paul Szarmach, M. Teresa Tavormina, & Joel T. Rosenthal.